THE WALT ALSTON REGIME

. . . Tops for N.L. Manager

WALT ALSTON steps into his sixteenth season as manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers, four in Brooklyn and twelve in Los Angeles, and his record over the first fifteen years has left as big an impression in the American League as it has in the National. Alston-piloted Dodger teams have won six pennants and four world championships. In addition he has been remarkably successful in All-Star competition so that his over-all game record against the American League is 25 wins, 18 losses. No other manager in National League history has matched that accomplishment.

The 1969 season, however, presents a real challenge to the boss of the Dodger dugout. For the first time in his major league managerial career, which began back in 1954, Walt comes off consecutive second-division finishes, eighth in 1967 and tied for seventh last year. He had, as a matter of fact, only two other poor years — seventh place in 1958 and sixth in 1964. Alston led his Dodgers to pennants in 1955, 1956, 1959, 1963, 1965 and 1966 with World Series victory following in '55, '59, '63 and '65.

Alston had only one turn at bat in the major leagues, as a Cardinal first baseman, but was a notable performer in the minors where he hit .300 or better in seven campaigns. He led four leagues in home runs, two in runs batted in and five in fielding percentage. Watch him pitch batting practice some day to his grandson, Robin Ogle, and you wouldn't believe he got his nickname, Smokey, from his high school fast ball — but he did.

A graduate of Miami (O.) University and a former schoolteacher, Walt broke into professional baseball in 1935 and began managing in 1940. In four years at Montreal, in the Triple-A International League, Alston had two firsts and two seconds and was ready when a Dodger vacancy occurred in 1954. For thirteen years, 1945 through 1957, minors and majors, Alston never had a club which finished below third place.

Alston lives in Darrtown, Ohio, where, during the off-season, he enjoys skeet-shooting, hunting, fishing, billiards, riding horses, carpentry and, after winning seasons, speechmaking. Just to keep him close to baseball, Walt has a pitching machine in his pasture but grandson Robin does most of the hitting.

In his span as Dodger manager there have been many highlights for Alston — the first World Series ever won by a Dodger club (1955), Sandy Koufax's four no-hit, no-run games, Maury Wills's 104 steals in 1962, Don Drysdale's amazing 58⅔ consecutive innings of shutout pitching last year and the comeback from a seventh-place finish in 1958 to a World Championship in 1959. Which thrill is at the top of the pile for him — well, there haven't been many teams which beat the mighty Yankees four in a row as Alston's 1963 club did. That one would have to rate first place in the great Alston regime.

The Skipper's Staff . . .

Two newcomers join the Dodgers' Board of Strategy in 1969 — Dwight (Red) Adams, the new pitching coach, and Roy Hartsfield, who led the Spokane Indians to the Western Division Championship in the Pacific Coast League last year. They join Jim Gilliam, Danny Ozark and Carroll Beringer on the Dodger coaching staff dedicated to bringing the club back into pennant contention.

JIM GILLIAM (born Oct. 17, 1928) has been with Walter Alston in all but one of his professional baseball seasons. After playing under Walt in Montreal, Gilliam went to the Dodgers in 1953, when he was National League Rookie of the Year, and Walt became his manager again in 1954. Jim played in seven World Series, three in Brooklyn and four in Los Angeles, performing at second, third and in the outfield. He established a league record for bases on balls to a rookie when he walked one hundred times in 1953 and led the league in 1959 in that department with 96. He set a modern major league record with twelve assists in a game in 1956 and his top World Series record was four hits in a game in 1959. Anyone who saw his stop for a vital force play on a hot grounder by Zoilo Versalles in the seventh game of the 1965 World Series will never forget it. That fielding play preserved a shutout for Sandy Koufax and may have won the series for the Dodgers.

DANNY OZARK (born Nov. 26, 1924) was an outstanding minor league batter in the Dodger organization from 1942 through 1961 with a vital three-year time out for more serious gunning in World War II. Danny was among our forces in the landing of Normandy and participated with valor in the Battle of the Bulge. Later in his minor league career, Ozark was picked by the Dodger organization to lead Wichita Falls (his first managerial post) and "lead" he did. He hit .350 that year and blasted 32 home runs which gave him the Big State League championship in both departments. Ozark managed Wichita Falls, Cedar Rapids, Macon, St. Paul, Omaha and Spokane on his way to the Dodgers in 1965. His Spokane team of 1963 won the Northern Division crown in the P.C.L.

ROY HARTSFIELD (born Oct. 25, 1925) piloted Spokane to Western Division championships in the Pacific Coast League in 1967 and 1968 and was rewarded with an elevation to the Dodger coaching staff. Roy, a former major league infielder with the Boston Braves, had managed since 1958, winning pennants in Panama City, St. Petersburg and Albuquerque before his successes at Spokane. Spokane had never won back-to-back titles since the club entered the league in 1958. Roy broke into pro ball in his home town of Atlanta in 1943 and, like Ozark, spent his next few years in military service — the Navy. He played for the Los Angeles Angels in their last season in the Pacific Coast League, 1957, so is no stranger here. He has managed winners in four of his last five campaigns in the minors, topping the second half of the Florida State League race at St. Petersburg, winning at Albuquerque in 1965 and pinning on two flags at Spokane. Most of the Dodgers' youngsters have played under Roy.

RED ADAMS (born Oct. 7, 1921) is a former Pacific Coast League star and well known in Los Angeles circles. Red had a 2.17 earned run average with the Los Angeles Angels in 1952 and a 2.05 figure three years later. He was voted the Most Valuable Player with 21 victories — and a .349 batting average — in 1945. He pitched for Portland and San Diego during his lenghty Coast career and had a "cup of coffee" with the Chicago Cubs. Red served as a scout for the Dodgers for many years and took over coaching duties last Winter when he joined Tommy Lasorda's staff in Mesa, Arizona, for Winter Instructional League play.

CARROLL BERINGER (born Aug. 14, 1928) has been an important part of the Dodger coaching fraternity for several seasons, serving in two capacities. A tireless batting practice pitcher, Carroll also has been the boss of the Dodger bullpen, keeping Walt Alston's firemen ready for emergency chores. Beringer hurled for the Dodgers in the minors from 1946 through 1960 and in his last three campaigns won 39 games while losing only 10. At one time the Dodgers discussed bringing him up as a pitcher. Instead he was signed on as a coach. One of the easiest chores in baseball is to warm up Beringer for his batting practice stint. Ten pitches and he's ready.

PITCHERS

DICK ARMSTRONG . . . Early in the 1968 Texas League season Dick Armstrong electrified the Dodgers' organization by flipping a no-hit, no-run game against the strong Dallas-Ft. Worth team. Coming up with an excellent slider, Armstrong laughed at the no-hit jinx as he and his team mates discussed it throughout the late innings of the game. Armstrong credited his catcher, Buddy Hallowell, with a strong assist in his achievement. He and Hallowell, roomies at Albuquerque, had been together in Dick's best season, 1966, when Armstrong won sixteen games for Santa Barbara and a Spokane trial in 1967. That victory total was tops for the California League that year. A graduate of Hoover High and Los Angeles State College, Armstrong was signed into the Dodger organization by Ben Wade after he had won California Collegiate A.A. All-League honors. He just missed a no-hitter when he hurled Santa Barbara to a one-hit 1-to-0 win over Modesto in his first pro season.

JIM BREWER . . . The turning point in the career of Jim Brewer came late in 1965 when he was sidelined by a sore elbow. Bone chips developed and surgery beckoned. Ever since that operation Jim has been fighting his way back — and last year he became just about one of the toughest relief pitchers in the game of baseball. The skillful operation, the patience of Manager Walt Alston and the perfection of an amazingly effective screwball were ingredients in Jim's comeback. To tab his 1968 campaign statistically it should be pointed out that Jim's dozen saves almost matched the rest of the bullpen staff. In fifty-four relief assignments, Brewer had a 2.49 earned run average, eight victories and 75 strikeouts in 76 innings. Brewer's screwball is tremendously effective against a right-handed batter. He also came up with a sidearm curve to handle the lefties and, chances are, Jim will have another pitch or two to add to his repertory in 1969 and future years. He is just about the best left-handed reliever in the game today — but he's not the sort who is willing to rest on his laurels.

BOB DARWIN . . . Dodger Vice-President Al Campanis, hurrying to the airport, became involved in a two-car collision. A member of the tow-truck crew which came to his aid was a 6-2, 190-pound athletic-looking young man. Al didn't know him by sight but the youngster, recognizing the Dodger executive's name, introduced himself as right-handed pitcher Bob Darwin. Now, Al quickly remembered him — how the Dodgers had tried to sign him before the Angels, how he had been acquired by the Baltimore Orioles and had overcome arm troubles late last season. When the list of players subject to draft reached the Dodger office, Campanis spotted Darwin's name and he soon became No. 1 on the Dodgers' "Wanted" list. With an early draft choice, the Dodgers corraled him and he'll be given a real shot at heavy bullpen duty with the Dodgers. Darwin's best minor league year was his first (11 and 4 at Stockton) when he fanned 202 batters in 153 innings. In the Eastern League last year he drew a good scouting report from Ed Liberatore despite his arm troubles.

DON DRYSDALE . . . There were many highlights in major league baseball during the 1968 campaign but none glittered more brightly than the amazing string of 58⅔ consecutive shutout innings hurled by Big Don Drysdale. Don kept the press box boys thumbing the pages of the record books as he blanked the Chicago Cubs, 1 to 0, May 14 and didn't stop until he had whitewashed the Astros, 1-0; Cardinals, 2-0; Astros, 5-0; Giants, 3-0; and Pirates, 5-0. Six straight shutouts wiped out the mark of five set by Guy Harris (Doc) White, of the Chicago White Sox in 1904. White, 89, living in Silver Springs, Md., sent a wire to Drysdale, rooting for the record to be broken. When Drysdale blanked the Phillies in the first and second innings June 8 he tied the major league record of 56 consecutive innings set by baseball's immortal, Walter (Big Train) Johnson. Finally, with one out in the fifth, a sacrifice fly by Howie Bedell sent Tony Taylor over the plate, ending Drysdale's great runless record. Winner of 204 games, the most by any Dodger pitcher, Don also stands at the top for the club in innings pitched (3369), strikeouts (2462) and shutouts (48). Come to think of it, he rates ahead of a couple of pretty fair men in those departments, too — Hall of Famer Dazzy Vance and Hall of Famer-to-be Sandy Koufax.

JOHN DUFFIE . . . Battling a sore arm, John Duffie came to Los Angeles for medical examination last summer and ran into deeper miseries. Attempting to start Alan Foster's car by pushing it, Duffie somehow got himself run over and suffered a torn ligament in the right knee. Surgery was performed in August but Duffie's season was concluded. By November the doctor's report on both his arm and his knee was satisfactory and the Dodgers decided to protect him on the Dodger club roster. John had a brief trial with the Dodgers in '67 after leading the Texas League with sixteen victories. At Jamestown (N.Y.) the year before he was a 13-game winner and last season, before his woes beset him, John had a 2-and-0 record at Spokane. Duffie won All-State honors in both basketball and baseball while attending Brewton-Parker Junior College in South Carolina. John was Pitcher-of-the-Year in 1967 Texas League play when he led the league in complete games (22), innings pitched (229), and wins (16).

LEON EVERITT . . . With such names as Dazzy Vance, Sandy Koufax and Don Drysdale in the club's history, strikeouts have become something of a trademark. For this reason the recent minor league exploits of Leon Everitt have come in for more than passing notice. In 1966 at Jamestown (N.Y.), the right-handed curveballer fanned 141 batters in 141 innings. The following year in the Texas League he struck out an even 200. And last Summer in the Pacific Coast League he set down 201 more. Leon led his circuit in 1967 and only one pitcher had more strikeouts last year in the P.C.L. Everitt accompanied the Dodgers to Japan after the 1966 season but a sore arm restricted his action. A 15-game winner with Albuquerque, he grabbed seventeen decisions last year as he helped Spokane top the Western Division of his league. Everitt won 16 games and lost NONE as he hurled H. B. Pemberton High to the Texas state championship in 1964. He also was unbeaten in 1965 and averaged sixteen strikeouts per game over the two seasons. His curve ball is rated among the best on the Dodger staff.

ALAN FOSTER . . . Alan Foster has been a better pitcher in the majors than he has been in the minors — and the Dodgers hope that's a habit he'll continue. In two brief trials with Los Angeles in 1967 and 1968, Foster, son of a Hacienda Heights doctor, has compiled earned run averages of 2.17 and 1.70. He is rated one of the brightest prospects to come along the Dodger trail in some time. Walt Alston was impressed with his fine performance in Japan in the Fall of 1966 when, once again, Alan was wearing a big league uniform. On that trip, in thirty-two innings, he compiled a 2.53 E.R.A. against Japanese batters. The top achievement of his career was accomplished in 1967 when he hurled two no-hit, no-run games, both against Seattle and in successive appearances against the Angel farm club. At Los Altos High, Foster starred in baseball, football and basketball and fanned 188 batters in ninety-nine innings. Somehow all the other clubs passed him up in the first round of the free agency draft of June, 1965, and the Dodgers got him the second time around — via a six-figure bonus.

DENNIS JAMES . . . One of the bright young southpaw pitching prospects in the Dodger organization is Denny James, who, as an American Legion star in Georgia, won 23 games and lost only one. In his first year in organized baseball (under Tom Lasorda at Ogden) in 1966, James won six and lost one game. Next Spring at Vero Beach, James was given close scrutiny by Dodger Manager Walt Alston on several exhibition trip when James pitched in batting practice. Alston, like others who had watched James, was impressed by his smooth over-the-top delivery. In the earliest scouting report on James (when he was still in his teens) it was said of him: "Major League curve ball right now. Velocity: sneaky fast." With college classes cutting into his baseball the last few years, James has not pitched as much as the Dodgers would have liked but they saw enough to bring him along to the big-club roster. At Albuquerque last year, it should be noted, he fanned 122 batters in 104 innings. That's in the Dodger pitching tradition.

PETE MIKKELSEN . . . The Dodgers' Spokane club lost the Pacific Coast League play-off to Tulsa but the Dodgers gained a pitcher they scouted during the championship games. Pete Mikkelsen, a veteran major leaguer with previous experience in the uniforms of the Yankees, Pirates and Cubs, was Cardinal property at Tulsa but the Dodgers made a trade for him, turning over southpaw Jim Ellis, of Spokane, in a straight swap. Used mostly in relief during his earlier visits to the majors and headed for more of the same with the Dodgers, Pete had a fine record as a starter under Warren Spahn at Tulsa last season. He was, as a mattter of fact, the best pitcher in the league with a 1.91 ERA in 26 games, a 16-and-4 record and 136 strikeouts in 184 innings. Mikkelsen and Leon Evereitt staged a 10-inning duel in the second game of the P.C.L. play-off and Mikkelsen won it, 4 to 2. Tommy Lasorda, scouting the series, recommended the Dodgers try to land Mikkelsen and, after losing Jim (Mudcat) Grant and Jack Billingham to Montreal in expansion maneuvers, the deal was made for Mikkelsen. Pete, incidentally, is a Los Angeles area product, having prepped at Mark Keppel High (Alhambra) with Mike McCormick, of the Giants. He spent last Winter at Prosser, Wash., where he raises cattle and asparagus — and gets in a lot of deer hunting.

JOE MOELLER . . . Late in the 1968 season, when the Dodgers were playing the best ball in the National League over the final month of the campaign, one of the contributors brought up from the minors was Joe Moeller. Moving up to the Dodgers wasn't anything new in the scheme of things for the handsome right-hander from the Manhattan Beach area. Joe had joined the Dodgers late in the first year of his professional career (1961). He seemed on his way early in '62 but, after winning six games early in the year, was shipped down to Omaha.

He spent all of '63 at Spokane but there he was, back the next Spring and this time, for a change, he spent the full season with the Dodgers. It was Spokane in '65 and back to L.A. in '65 — shuttle service. Said Walt Alston: "Joe handled the toughest of all pitching chores in 1966 and did well for us." He had the occasional start as well as both long and short relief assignments and finished with a 2.51 earned run average. Dropped back to Spokane in May of 1967, Joe was drafted by the Astros but returned to the Dodgers after a Spring trial. And, in the Autumn, of course, Joe bounced back to the Dodgers once again. At Spokane he had a notable 15-9 won-lost record and an earned run of 2.21. And, with Los Angeles, he scored a fine 3-to-2 win over the Reds, allowing only four hits in 8⅓ innings before Jim Brewer came to his aid. Now, it's Joe's fervent hope he's in the majors to stay awhile.

CLAUDE OSTEEN . . . Dodger southpaw Claude Osteen has more than one reason for bearing down toward a better season in 1969. Not only was he unhappy with his first sub-.500 season in five campaigns last year but he also doesn't want to spend another Winter worrying about being traded. It got so Claude hated to answer the phone at his home in Brea, fearing notification from the Dodger front office that he had been shipped elsewhere. If it will make Claude feel any better about it, the Dodgers discussed him only occasionally while the trade winds were blowing and are happy he's still wearing Dodger spangles. Left-handed pitchers with Claude's consistency are hard to come by. His earned run averages, in four years with Los Angeles, have been 2.79, 2.85, 3.22 and 3.08. And, with greater hitting support, his won-lost record would be far more glamorous. He seemed well on his way to a 20-victory campaign in 1967 when he was the first major leaguer to reach eleven wins but was able to win only six of his last twenty starts. In 1968 the Dodgers scored a total of 22 runs in the eighteen games he lost. He was on the short side of five shutouts. He rallied strongly at the end of the season and in his last eight starts the Dodgers were victorious seven times. Obtained from the Senators in the Frank Howard deal, Claude helped the Dodgers to pennants in 1965 and 1966 and hurled a shutout in the third game of the World Series of '65 after the Dodgers had blown the first two games to the Twins.

JOHN PURDIN . . . Until he ran into some late-season difficulties, John Purdin was one of the most effective Dodger pitchers of 1968. A bout with tonsilitis may have had something to do with his troubles and John underwent a tonsilectomy as one of his first off-season acts. In mid-August Purdin's earned run average was 1.88. In his last five outings, however, he was tagged for ten earned runs and his season figure zoomed to 3.05. Purdin was not on the mound in a game after Sept. 7. John is regarded in the Dodger front office as "O'Malley's Boy" — and we do mean Walter F. The boss of the Dodgers got two letters recommending the club go after Purdin as soon as he was discharged from the Air Force in Germany. A scout was sent to his home and beat an emissary from the Cincinnati Reds by a half hour. Purdin, inspected by the scout in a backyard warm-up, was signed before the Reds man got there. A member of the Dodger organization since 1964, Purdin was up for the full season of 1965 but dropped back to the minors the next two years. He was Spokane's most active starter in 1967, leading the league with thirty-one games — all starts. He reversed the procedure with the Dodgers last year, you'll note, and made only one start in thirty-five games.

JIM RAYNOR . . . He has been able to play only two half-seasons for Dodger Farm Clubs but he's on the 1969 Dodger Spring 40-player roster — Jim Raynor. In 1967, Jim was finishing up his courses at East Carolina College. In '68 he was teaching school and stayed away from baseball until June. Nevertheless, the Dodgers saw enough of him in his two brief seasons to warrant his protection against a draft "steal." For one thing he has fanned 198 batters in 209 innings. Utilizing an excellent curve ball, he fashioned a 2.66 earned run average last season at Bakersfield. At Clinton (N.C.) High Raynor caught the eye of Dodger Scout John Carey who signed him.

BILL SINGER . . . In his first forty-six innings of pitching in 1968, the Dodgers supported (?) Bill Singer with one run. He won one of his first six starts only because his team mates scored three runs (for a 3-2 win) AFTER he had gone to the showers at the end of eight fruitless frames. For a good part of the season it looked like Bullet-Balling Bill might become the strikeout champion of the year but he had to settle for a third-place total of 227 behind Bob Gibson and Ferguson Jenkins. Singer fired six shutouts last season for almost half of his victories. His 2.88 earned run average kept his lifetime record below three runs per game. Unfortunately the low-scoring antics of the Dodgers bedeviled him most of the season. In his seventeen defeats the Dodgers scored a total of thirty-two runs. In August Singer lost five games in a row but he snapped out of it, with the rest of the Dodgers, in September, hurling four victories, including two shutouts. "I was concentrating on strikeouts," said Bill. "When I just began to think about getting some outs, I did a lot better." While Sepember was one of Bill's more enjoyable months in 1968, the month also produced a major disappointment. Seemingly on his way to a 1-to-0 win over the Cubs, Singer ran smack-dab into a Grand Slam Home Run by Ron Santo in the ninth and wound up with a 4-1 defeat.

MIKE STRAHLER . . . Obtained by the Dodgers in a minor league draft, Mike Strahler was one of the most pleasant surprises of 1968. Originally signed out of Sacramento by the Phillies, Strahler underwent an operation for the removal of a kidney and was on the comeback trail when Dodger scouts saw him in a Winter league in the San Francisco area and marked him down for a draft if he became available. With such pitchers as Alan Foster, John Duffie, Don Sutton, Bruce Brubaker, Joe Moeller and others on the Spokane roster, Strahler didn't figure to get too much action with the Indians last season. But injuries sidelined several Spokane pitchers and Mike made the most of his chance. In his first five starts for Roy Hartsfield, Mike, in 42 innings, allowed six runs for a 1.29 ERA, hurled two shutouts and suffered his only defeat when Spokane was shut out behind him. By season's end he was just about the club's most dependable pitcher — with a 2.30 earned run average — and the Dodgers kept their fingers crossed during the expansion draft, fearing he would be taken by either San Diego or Montreal. When he got through, he was quickly brought up to the Dodgers' 40-man roster so as to be unavailable during the major league draft at the Winter meetings. In his final American Legion season (1965), Strahler won nine games without a loss and helped his team to the California State finals.

DON SUTTON . . . Relegated to the bullpen for a stretch in June and July, Don Sutton roared down the 1968 stretch for the Dodgers and was one of the big contributors in their September flourish when they had the best won-and-lost record for the month in the National League. In his last eight starts, Sutton won six and lost two, one of the defeats being by a 2-0 score. He topped Bob Gibson, 3 to 2, late in September and a few starts earlier, against Philadelphia, had his career high (12) in strikeouts. Two of his September victories were shutouts over the Phillies and Braves and in his last eight games he gave up only 14 earned runs for an ERA of 2.00. He walked only fifteen while fanning forty-nine in that late-season splurge. Clearly, Walt Alston's decision to send Sutton to the bullpen had paid off. Down there, if your desire is to be a starter, you get a lot of time to think things out. Sutton had begun the season in Spokane, having remained behind the Dodgers at Vero Beach after reporting late from military service. He won one and lost one with the Indians and joined the Dodgers in late April. Don, married during the off-season and now a resident of Burbank, served the Dodgers on their after-dinner oratorical staff last Winter.

BATTERS

KEN BOYER . . . Finding a pinch hitter of some consistency has been one of the toughest chores for the Dodger front office since the club came West. They picked up their most effective man for this job in some time last year when Ken Boyer, a free agent, was signed on in May. The 37-year-old veteran of fourteen major league seasons (Cards, Mets and Chisox) drove in eleven runs as a pinch hitter and that matched the best achievement in that department since Lee Walls sent eleven over the plate in 1962. He had six pinch hits, one a bases-loaded double against the Cubs in a great comeback victory by an 8-4 score. Of course, Ken did more than serve as a pinch hitter. Playing both third and first base, he batted .271, drove in forty-one runs in 221 times at bat, easily the best ratio on the club. Only Tom Haller and Ron Fairly drove in more. His six home runs included two in a September game against the Phillies when the Dodgers inaugurated their fine stretch drive. Boyer turned in many notable achievements for the Cardinals. In his only World Series (1964) he hit a bases-loaded home run. He was the major league All-Star third baseman four times, 1961 through 1964, Most Valuable Player in the N.L. in 1964 and also picked as major league Player of the Year. He was awarded the Golden Glove at third base five times and led the circuit in double play participation by a third baseman five different seasons. He played in ten All-Star games and had a composite batting average of .348.

WILLIE CRAWFORD . . . When the Dodgers put $100,000 into a bonus for Willie Crawford back in 1964 they realized they had landed a ball player of tremendous potential — fleet of foot, powerful at the plate, strong armed and possessed of great desire to become a major league star. In the years he has spent with the Dodgers, Willie has lost none of that potential and his improvement finally landed him on the Dodgers of 1968 last July. Although his .251 batting average was not nearly the figure the Dodgers have planned for him, Crawford had flashes of brilliance which beckon big things for him in his Dodger future. He hit his first major league home run Sept. 3, when the Dodgers had three in an inning against the Phillies. He hit three more during the month and two were in successive appearances against Bob Gibson, one in St. Louis and the other at Dodger Stadium. It is significant that, of Willie's 44 hits last year with the Dodgers, almost one-third of them were for extra bases, 12 doubles, a triple and four homers. Tutored by Dixie Walker during the off-season, Willie hopes to cut down materially on his strikeouts in 1969 and "contact" should be the answer for him. When he strikes, he strikes with power.

WILLIE DAVIS . . . Willie Davis has been an experimenter at the plate in recent years. He has tried one batting style after another and it could be this has caused some of the inconsistency which has bedeviled his career. Last season he was convinced that a batting style which was a cross between one used by the late Mel Ott and another used by Sadahura Oh, of Japanese fame, was best for him. After a prolonged slump he gave it up. It was about that time he viewed (at least a dozen times) a motion picture on batting by the Hall of Famer Ted Williams. Call it a coincidence or not, Willie became a better hitter the rest of the year. Willie was a .227 hitter at the All-Star break, a .276 hitter the rest of the way. In one stretch, late in August and into September, he got 33 hits in 87 times at bat — a .379 pace. There is no more exciting Dodger of today than the Will O' The Wisp who plays centerfield for them, whether he's going to a wall for a catch, diving on his ears to snag a low line drive or madcapping it around the bases. Now, he's in his ninth full year as a Dodger and consistency has been the only thing he has lacked. Perhaps 1969 will be that sort of year for him. The late Fresco Thompson probably summed up the Davis case as well as it has been "summed." Comparing him with the Cards' great Lou Brock, Fresco said: "Willie can run as fast, throw as well and, on occasion, hit the ball as far as Lou — and he certainly has the ability to earn as big a check. Brock has no more potential than Willie but he certainly has capitalized on it."

TOMMY DEAN . . . Rated by many as a major league shortstop and kept in the minors only by his light bat, Tommy Dean readily agreed to some Winter work in Arizona under the tutelage of the Dodger's new batting instructor, Dixie Walker. The former idol of Flatbush is high on Dean's chances of improvement at the plate. Dean had a good collection of extra-base hits and he helped Spokane win the championship of the Western Division in the Pacific Coast League last year. Dean, who raises cotton, corn, cattle and hogs at Iuka, Miss., would not have had a chance to play professional baseball if his brother hadn't built a ball field for the town of Iuka. Given a chance to play, Tommy hit .510 and major league scouts came a-running. The Dodgers got there first and landed the youngster an hour after his graduation. Tommy had twice been picked as the All-State high school shortstop and he was All-American in prep basketball as well as a track star. He rejoins Roy Hartsfield, his Spokane manager and one of his strongest boosters ever since he broke into baseball. Back in 1965, Hartsfield, then manager at Albuquerque, tabbed Dean as "better than half the shortstops now in the majors." He has been high on him ever since. Dean's fielding average of .968 tied for the best in the P.C.L. in 1966 and the last two years he has fielding .969, tops in the league.

RON FAIRLY . . . It can be safely said that no Dodger greeted the club's Winter announcement that home plate had been moved ten feet closer to the fences more joyfully than Ron Fairly. Ron had so many fly balls and line drives caught on the track at Dodger Stadium that it had become a psychological factor with him. Year after year Fairly hit more home runs on the road than he did at home — and batted with more confidence. Ron has come off two sub-par seasons but retains one strength. He has been effective in the RBI department. Last year, even with a .234 average, he was second to Tom Haller, the club leader. Despite an injured wrist Fairly enjoyed an encouraging September, batting in the .330 area in the stretch. Ron has been one of the outstanding "clutch" players on the Dodgers and played a major part in four pennant-winning efforts, 1959, 1963, 1965 and 1966. He hit a resounding .379 in the World Series against the Twins in '65, making at least one hit in each of the seven games, including two home runs. Still only thirty years of age, Ron is second only to Don Drysdale in Dodger seniority. He was one of the first players signed by the club when it came to the West Coast, spent his first full season with the Dodgers in '59 and, after a year in Spokane for additional polishing, bounced back to become a regular (at either first base or the outfield) ever since 1961, when he had his highest batting average, majors or minor, by hitting .322. In 1966, when the Dodgers went down to the last out before they clinched the title, Ron's torrid September, with twenty-two runs batted in, was as big a factor as Sandy Koufax's fantastic pitching.

LEN GABRIELSON . . . The Dodgers swung one of their rare deals with the California Angels when they landed Len Gabrielson for Johnny Werhas — and it has been a most successful transaction from the Los Angeles point of view. Len was visioned as a strong left-handed pinch-hitter for the Dodgers but in his two Dodger campaigns he has contributed considerably more than that. In ninety games in 1967, he batted .261 and last season he took part in 108 games and moved his average up to a highly creditable .270. And he was the only Dodger who reached double figures in home runs, hitting ten. "Gabe" spent the early part of '68 doing that for which he was obtained, serving as a substitute batter, but in mid-May he took on more regular chores and his batting average began to climb. He was hitting .125 when Skipper Alston put him into a game as a starter against the Cardinals and a 3-for-5 day kept him in the line-up. He enjoyed several career highs when he made 82 hits, drove in 35 runs and socked 16 doubles. Len is part of a family dynasty. His dad, Len, sr., played in the Pacific Coast League ten years and an uncle, Bill Matheson, played in the Yankee farm system. Len's younger brother, Doug, became Giants' property. Visit Dodger Stadium early any afternoon and you'll see Len The 3d working out with his dad. He isn't eligible to be signed — but earliest scouting reports say he's got great actions — at least for a six-year-old. One of Rod Dedeaux's many U.S.C. boys who made good, Len was signed into pro ball by the Braves, played in Milwaukee in 1963-'64 and was sold to the Cubs who subsequently traded him to the Giants. With San Francisco in 1965 he had his best campaign, a .301 average as a Giant and a .293 mark over the full season.

BILL GRABARKEWITZ . . . You get some idea of the "bulldog" in the make-up of Bill Grabarkewitz when you hear this story. Having suffered a broken ankle which necessitated open surgery, Bill was on crutches from August, well into October. Visiting Dr. Frank Jobe in mid-November he was given permission to "run a bit" when he returned home. Next report the Dodgers got out of Texas was that Bill was running a half-mile every day. Even before he suffered the broken ankle, Bill sustained a fracture of a finger on a crazy hop at Albuquerque but insisted on staying in the line-up by taking on an outfield assignment. The late Fresco Thompson had planned to bring Bill up to the Dodgers for shortstop duty but, of course, couldn't recommend Walt Alston be saddled with an infielder sporting a broken finger. So, Bill kept on playing in the Texas League and suffered a broken bone in his wrist when hit by a pitched ball — then the ankle and crutches. But the Dodgers' spring plans called for Bill to get the No. 1 shot at shortstop and Grabarkewitz was confident he could make it. He has been in the Dodgers' organization for only three seasons but his extra-base output is most encouraging — 44 doubles, 16 triples and 45 home runs. And his batting average has moved up in the tougher leagues — .258, .287 and last year's .308. As happy as he should be about that average, Bill would rather forget 1968 altogether. "I was X-rayed so often last year, I glow in the dark," Bill cracked during one of his medical visits to Los Angeles.

TOM HALLER . . . While other batters, Los Angeles and visiting thumpers, had a rugged time of it at Dodger Stadium last year, Tom Haller thrived at the plate in his new home. The ex-Giant, acquired in a deal which sent Ron Hunt and Pee Wee Oliver to Candlestick Park, took advantage of the spacious field to spray hits around for a .337 mark, the best by any Dodger since Tommy Davis opened the park with a .352 average back in 1962. A home run hitter by inclination in San Francisco, Haller decided not to concentrate on pulling the ball in Los Angeles and his plan paid off. When his season was concluded he had a .285 batting tag and that was the highest the former Illinois quarterback ever achieved in any league, major or minor. Back in '59 at Springfield (Eastern League) he had hit .276. Haller gained another distinction as the Dodgers' "Mr. Clutch" of 1968. He delivered more game-winning hits (eight) than any Dodger. Ron Fairly was second at seven. Both were effective in the stretch, six of Haller's decisive blows and thirty-four of his RBIs coming after July 10. Oddly, though, he had a higher batting average before the All-Star game, .300 to .267 after the intermission. When Tom won Dodger Stadium hitting honors last year he joined a select list of Dodgers who have led the club since it came West — among them: Carl Furillo, Duke Snider, Frank Howard, Wally Moon, Tommy Davis (twice), John Roseboro, Lou Johnson, Willie Davis and Al Ferrara. Tom was declared Dodger of the Year by the Baseball Writers and by the fans voting in the annual Long Beach Independent Press Telegram popularity poll. In addition to leading the Dodgers he was the top-hitting catcher in the majors.

TOMMY HUTTON . . . The Dodgers have one of the all-time best fielding first basemen in National League history in Wes Parker, who made only one error last year, but right behind Parker they have another sensational glove man in Tommy Hutton. In 1967 at Spokane Tommy made one error in 1,07[illegible] chances for a .999 average and last year, again with Spokane, he made only four errors in 1,081 chances — five errors in 2,160 chances! After his long misplay in 1967, Hutton set a new league record of 116 errorless games at first base. The former South Pasadena prep star, who was the Most Valuable Player and batting champion (.340) of the Texas League in 1966, bogged down at the plate a bit in '67 but bounced back to a commendable .276 last season to earn another trial with the Dodgers. Twice selected for All-City honors at South Pasadena, where he also starred in basketball, Tommy was taken on the Dodgers' tour of Japan after the 1966 season as a reward for his fine season in the minors. Dixie Walker worked on Tommy at the plate during Winter Instructional League play and the youngster responded with a .284 average. Walker convinced Tommy that he should become a line drive hitter and the Dodgers were happy to bring him through the expansion draft for another trial with the Dodgers.

HUTTON, THOMAS GEORGE

VON JOSHUA . . . Don Drysdale was pitching in a 1968 Dodgertown camp game while the club was elsewhere in Florida and a young left-handed hitter blazed a line drive past his ears. When he picked himself out of the dirt Big-D asked his shortstop: "Who was that?" "A kid named Von Joshua," Drysdale was told. "He's down here on his Easter Holidays." Don wiped the sweat off his brow and wise-cracked: "Why doesn't he spend his holidays at home?" That wasn't the only time "first impressions" by Joshua were startling. In the Summer of 1967, Al Campanis was watching from the side lines at a San Rafael tryout camp and was amazed at what Joshua showed him. It developed the Giants had drafted him in January, failed to follow up on him and then ALL clubs had passed Joshua up in the June draft. He was, therefore, eligible to be taken then and there — and was signed by the Dodgers, that very night. When he finished his Laney Junior College year, Joshua was rushed to Tri-Cities where he won the Northwest League batting title with an average of .363. He played a fortnight at Santa Barbara and hit .382. Although he had only a brief out-of-school Spring training in '68, when he introduced himself to Drysdale, Joshua was moved to Double-A as soon as his studies were completed and, in seventy-four games in the Texas League, hit .298 and was tabbed by his manager, Roger Craig, as "the greatest prospect in the Dodger organization." Fleet of foot and an instinctive outfielder, Joshua led the Northwest League in '67 in not only batting but doubles, triples and hits. He was All-League three years in high school (Castlemont High in Oakland) and batted .370 at Laney J.C. in 1967 before the Dodgers landed him.

RANDY KOHN . . . The Dodgers had little more than scouting (and medical) reports to go on when they invited Randy Kohn to Spring training in 1969. On the restricted list following an injury to his right shoulder, which necessitated surgery, Kohn has had only one season of professional baseball — for Ogden in 1967. Selected by the Mets in the free agency draft after he had starred in baseball, basketball and football at Greenville, S.C., High, Kohn had refused to sign and, instead, had enrolled at the University of Georgia, where he remained for two years of baseball and then signed with the Dodgers. Winner of MVP awards galore in scholastic ranks, Randy got his first pro time at bat with the bases loaded — and singled home two runs. All Dodger scouts who reported on him were high on his chances of becoming a major league catcher. Typical was this report from John Carey: "Strong, well-built and active. Has good hands and a strong arm. Showed fine power at the plate — a still bat and short stride. This boy could go high." Another scout rated his potential in this manner: "Has the Boog Powell power."

ANDY KOSCO . . . When the Dodgers obtained Andy Kosco from the Yankees in a trade last Winter for Mike Kekich they filed the deal as a "delayed acquisition." Los Angeles had tried to swing a deal for Kosco when he was "frozen" in the Twins organization but, instead, he was moved to the Athletics' farm system and then drafted by the Yankees. Kosco fits into the Dodgers' plans for additional right-handed power. He was second on the club in the RBI department for the Yankees last year. Originally, he had collected a sizeable bonus from Detroit but came to the Twins in '64. At Duluth-Bismark he was advised to bat right-handed instead of switching. It surely worked. Kosco hit .346, leading the league, also setting the pace in hits, doubles, home runs and runs batted in. At Denver in 1965 his 116 RBIs led another league. As soon as the Dodgers announced their deal for Kosco they got an offer for him from Minnesota. Kosco's power is to left center and the Yankee Stadium 457-foot alley cost him numerous home runs last year. Only nineteen home runs have been driven over that fence in the entire history of the ball park, which has housed or played host to some of the greatest right-handed sluggers of all time. Kosco should find Dodger Stadium more inviting to his kind of power.

JIM LEFEBVRE . . . A strange injury sidelined Jim Lefebvre for almost two months last season and just about ruined his year. Jim sprained his wrist on a missed strike during a game in San Francisco April 20 and didn't get back into the line-up again until June 20. By then Jim practically had to go through Spring training again to catch up with the league's pitchers. In military service for two weeks in August, he also was sidelined in September by a hamstring muscle pull. Add it all up and Lefebvre's .241 batting average was almost remarkable. He had his best splurge at the plate in September when, in a 7-game streak, he hit .360, socked four doubles and a home run and drove in eight runs. His big game of the year was a 4-for-4 shot against Cincinnati, including a double and a homer. Lefebvre, selected as the Dodgers' top rookie in 1965 (12 homers) and Sophomore of the Year in 1966 (24 home runs) ran into the injury jinx the next two years and his RBI count dropped from 74 in 1966 to 50 in '67 to 31 last season. Now, he's fighting for his job. Jim enjoyed one event in '68 when his marriage to beautiful Jean Bakke, of Waterford, Wisconsin, was one of the Dodger social highlights of the season.

JOHN MILLER . . . Top home run hitter of last year's Spokane club, PCL Western Division champions, John Miller hit 25 doubles, 3 triples and a dozen circuit smashes for a total of 200 bases (133 hits). He scored 72 runs and drove in 70. In addition, he played first base, third base and the outfield, all of which made him Roy Hartsfield's Most Valuable Player. Miller, born in Alhambra and a graduate of Rosemead High, was All-Sierra League in both baseball and football and All-CIF in baseball. Originally signed by the Yankees, he hit a home run his first major league turn at bat. And, believe it not, he is the only player in the history of the Bronx Bombers ever to accomplish that feat. The Dodgers had serious thoughts of keeping Miller as their right-handed pinch hitter last Spring but the acquisition of Rocky Colavito, later released, thwarted that promotion for him. In the Winter of 1967-'68 he played for the Dodger's Arizona team and batted .300 in thirty-nine games. Last Winter was spent in the Dominican League. He was the only Spokane player picked on the Pacific Coast League's All-Star team, winning a utility role, of course.

GARY MOORE . . . Moved all the way from Bakersfield to the Dodgers' Spring roster of 1969, Gary Moore comes to the squad with excellent minor league credentials. A graduate of Nathan Hale High (Tulsa, Okla.) he was a quarterback in football, a guard in basketball and a pitcher-outfielder in baseball. He's now listed as a first baseman, a position he always preferred. He played football and baseball at the University of Texas, winning All-Southwest Conference honors on the diamond two seasons. He was with the Texas team which beat first-rated Alabama, 21 to 18, in the 1965 Orange Bowl and played in the N.C.A.A. baseball World Series two seasons. He also played for the Tulsa Babe Ruth team which won a World Series at Stockton. He lists as his greatest baseball thrill the fact he hit two homers and a double in a game against Reno in 1967, going 7 for 9 in the series for Santa Barbara. He hit 25 doubles, 2 triples and 9 homers for Bakersfield last season and was among the top ten hitters in the league at .293. Moore also had a highly creditable RBI count of 75, which was among the six best in the league. He has two unusual hobbies — plays the drums and "collects pipes."

WES PARKER . . . Vin Scully almost jumped out of his radio booth in Houston when an error was called against Wes Parker in a ball game in the Astrodome. It wasn't a case of favoritism. Scully saw a bad hop and called it that way. That however, was the ONLY error Parker made at first base all season — and there never has been a regular major league first baseman who has gone through a season with a 1.000 fielding average. If it's going to be done, Parker is the sort who'll do it. No one makes great plays seem easier than the Golden Glove first baseman of 1967 and 1968. Last year he fielded .999, handling 1,008 chances out of 1,009. The year before he made four errors in 985 chances for a .997 mark. In five Dodger seasons at first base, Wes has made only 23 errors in 5,018 chances. Over the last three years he has made a total of only ten errors. And there are many who think Wes could shuck his first baseman's mitt and become one of the game's finest centerfielders. The error called against Wes in Houston ruined his bid for a National League record held by Frank McCormack — 138 consecutives games without a miscue. Wes got as far as an even one hundred when a ground ball by Norm Miller bounced crazily off the Astroturf and the scorer signalled "error." If it had not been for that call Parker would have had a 114-game streak going into 1969.

PAUL POPOVICH . . . When the Dodgers swung their deal for Zoilo Versalles in the Winter of 1967-'68, their other shortstop deal — Lou Johnson for Paul Popovich — didn't seem necessary. But, as events later proved, Popovich was not only to become one of the key Dodger players but also one of the most popular on the club. At one game fifty fans named Popovich, none related, turned out to honor their hero. Before season's end thousands of fans of different names were on his bandwagon and he went to Spring training in 1969 as the No. 1 candidate for the shortstop job with an additional chance to take over at second base. Walt Alston called the turn on "Pop" when he predicted in the Spring, Paul would play more games than any other Dodger infielder. He did, getting into 134 of them at second, third and short. Alston tabbed him as "one of the most pleasant surprises" of the year. Not at all satisfied with his .232 batting average Popovich asked for a chance to do some hitting under Dixie Walker, the club's new batting instructor, in Arizona. A dozen hits would have given him a plus .250 average and Pop figures he could be that sort of hitter. One of the most sure-handed infielders in recent Dodger history, Popovich says he thinks he has sufficient range to handle shortstop. Truth is that the Dodgers didn't start to look like a winning club until Popovich was moved to shortstop (and Bill Sudakis came up to play third) in September. Steady work also helped Paul at the plate. From Sept. 6 through season's end he made 24 hits in seventy-one times at bat — a healthy .338 average. It may very well be that splurge gained the Dodgers' star utility infielder a regular's job.

BILL RUSSELL . . . Only a few members of the Dodgers' 40-player Spring roster played in A-ball last year but Bill Russell, hard-hitting, fleet-footed outfielder could develop as the right-handed hitter the club has been seeking. At Bakersfield (California League) last year Russell hit 16 doubles, 3 triples and 17 home runs, batting .280. He broke in at Ogden two years earlier with a .356 average at the age of seventeen. Scouting reports were unanimous on one thing about Bill, his "quick wrists" at the plate. His 23 steals for Bakersfield made an early forecast by Tommy Lasorda stand up: "Some day this boy could become an outstanding baserunner." Signed at a Pittsburg, Kansas, tryout camp by scouts John Keenan and Monty Basgall, Russell had been an outstanding American Legion player. Pittsburg High had no baseball team but Russell lettered in basketball and track. Later in the state basketball tournament he was selected for MVP honors. But basketball was forgotten when he hit a Grand Slam home run for Lasorda's Ogden club in 1966. He still rates that the top thrill of his young career.

TED SAVAGE . . . In the quest for right-handed hitting in the outfield last year the Dodgers traded Phil Regan, their great relief pitcher, to the Chicago Cubs for outfielder Ted Savage. Injuries prevented Ted from giving a full account of his ability but one of his strongest boosters is skipper Walt Alston, who likes his hustle, determination and occasional flashes of power at the plate. Ted had been with four National League clubs before he was acquired — the Phillies, Pirates, Cardinals and Cubs. In the deal for Savage the Dodgers also got a left-handed pitcher, Jim Ellis, who was used by Al Campanis in a swap last Winter for Pete Mikkelsen who figured as a replacement for Jack Billingham and Jim (Mudcat) Grant, Regan's successors in th right-handed section of the bullpen. Jack and Mudcat had been lost to Montreal in expansion maneuvers. Savage got his first professional contract from the Kansas City Athletics but went on the voluntarily retired list before he ever played a game. He was a Lieutenant in the U.S. Army Medical Corps, 1958-1960 and hit .411 to lead Brooke Army Medical Center to the Fourth Army championship. The next year ('59) he hit .378 and the Phillies signed him when he returned to civilian status. In 1961 at Buffalo his .325 average was tops for his circuit and he was named the International League's Most Valuable Player.

BART SHIRLEY . . . A one-time Cotton Bowl star for the University of Texas Bart Shirley bounced back to the Dodgers for the fourth time last season when injuries and military service stints depleted the club's roster of infielders. Bart had played magnificently for the Spokane Indians, hitting .280 as their second baseman, but he was immediately pressed into service with the Dodgers as a shortstop. Shirley, signed for a sizeable bonus in 1960, had almost decided to give up baseball when he hit .225 in Venezuela. "But it was at that time I made a decision to stop trying to hit everything downtown. I decided I'd just make contact and see what happened." Bart has bounced up and down like a rubber ball with the Dodgers. Up for a late look in 1964, he was back in Spokane for all of '65. After playing most of 1966 with Los Angeles he was dropped back to Spokane and drafted by the Mets, who returned him to Spokane early in '67. It was that Winter he made his decision to be a "hitter" instead of a swinger — and back to the Dodgers he came. In February of '68, Bart married Cathy Castano, whose dad, Tony, played with and against Walt Alston and now manages the Puebla club in the Mexican League.

TED SIZEMORE . . . Versatility has become a Dodger tradition in recent years and no one fits into this picture for the future better than Ted Sizemore, who performed as a catcher and outfielder with Spokane last season and, during Winter Instructional League play in Arizona, was converted to second base chores. Monty Basgall, Dodger Scout, was in charge of Sizemore's infield classes and was amazed how speedily the youngster learned the rudiments of second base play, particularly as pivot man in double plays. Tommy Lasorda, manager of the Arizona contingent who will pilot Spokane in '69, said of the experiment: "Ted has no trouble with the physical things required of a second baseman. He makes the pivot well. He goes both to his left and right well and he is learning the wrist-snap throw rather than the full arm toss of a catcher or outfielder." Basgall added: "Ted has to learn only the position plays, where he should be on cut-offs, etc., to become a finished performer at second base." Sizemore should like Dodger Stadium's expanse. He hits to all fields and doesn't go for the long ball. He hit .296 at Albuquerque and moved that up to .314 in the tougher Pacific Coast League. Ted suffered a broken bone in his right hand and was sidelined for five weeks but bounced right back and picked up where he had left off at the plate.

BOB STINSON . . . Another of the Dodger conversion jobs in the minors during recent years put catching equipment aboard brawny Bob Stinson, who had been signed as an outfielder by the Dodgers. Touted highly for his desire and his "great" arm by all his minor league managers, Stinson is a powerful hitter and was recommended as a catcher by Tommy Lasorda who managed him in the Pioneer League. Tommy also suggested Stinson might try switch-hitting but that may be in Stinson's future. Watching him at Vero Beach, Goldie Holt rated him "one of the most aggressive boys" in camp. The old Kansas City Athletics had the first chance to sign Stinson but the Dodgers followed up and got him in the special phase draft. He was picked 1966 All-American Junior College and the No. 1 player in the National championship tournament.

BILL SUDAKIS . . . Not in many seasons has a Dodger got off to the start Bill Sudakis enjoyed when he broke in during the club's September drive. Bill was the spark which brought the Dodgers the best record in the National League during that final month. Arriving in Philadelphia after an all-day jaunt from Albuquerque, Sudakas was told by Walt Alston: "Get into that uniform in a hurry — you're batting fifth." Bill hit a home run and the Dodgers, who had blown two ball games the night before, were on their way. Next game he got two hits, including a triple. Two games later he had a 3-hit night and bashed two doubles. A pair of hits the next game (and another double) hoisted his batting average to .444 and a couple of days later he came to the plate with the bases jammed and his mother watching him play in the majors for the first time. Of course he hit a Grand Slam homer. Sudakis, who was picked as the Texas League All-Star third baseman with a .294 average, also won Co-MVP honors there, tying Jim Spencer, El Paso's first baseman. After the season was concluded, Bill joined the Winter Instructional League team at Mesa and hit .363, winning plaudits from all the Dodger viewers. Said Tommy Lasorda: "He came to play." Said Jim Gilliam: "He's for real." Said Dixie Walker: "You have some kind of player here." Bill was the thirty-sixth man to play third base for the Dodgers in Los Angeles. Barring accident he'll handle it all alone for more than a few seasons. Oh, yes, after the season was concluded, Sudakis, who remained in Los Angeles to handle some after-dinner speaking chores for the Dodgers, visited his doctor. It seems Bill had been having a little trouble with his contact lenses. "No wonder," Dr. Stephen Popovich told him, "you've been wearing your left lens in your right eye and vice-versa." Wonder how well Bill will do when he isn't playing "cross-eyed."

JEFF TORBORG . . . Students of catching rate Jeff Torborg as one of the best in the game. Pitchers like to throw to him and he has caught some of the classic performances of Dodger history, including Sandy Koufax's fourth No-hitter and perfect game and Don Drysdale's fifth straight shutout last season when Big-D tied Doc White's 1904 record (and went on for six in a row next time out). Torborg credits much of his recent improvement with some advice he picked up in the bullpen from relief pitcher Jim Brewer. "You've got to learn to relax," Jim told him. John Roseboro had told him much the same thing and convinced him that he had to stop "fighting the position and sit there relaxed instead of coming up tensely on every pitch and every play." Torborg, a former All-American at Rutgers, has been with the Dodgers organization since 1963 but has spent only part of a season in the minors. Late last season when "expansion" was the big topic of conversation among players, Torborg asked the Dodgers to try to move him to one of the new clubs so that he could become a No. 1 catcher. Manager Walt Alston talked him out of it, however, and insisted that Jeff be protected as soon as possible. He was — and he's still very much a Dodger.

1968 PITCHING STATISTICS

Don Drysdale dominated the pitching accomplishments of the Dodgers in 1968. He became the club's leader in victories (204), most innings pitched (3,369), most strikeouts (2,462) and most shutouts (48) during the season. His most remarkable performance, however, was a string of 58⅔ consecutive scoreless innings of pitching which stretched through six-plus games from May 14 into the fifth inning of a game with the Phillies June 8. Along the way Don set a new all-time record of six straight shutouts, breaking Doc White's 1904 mark, and a new consecutive-inning streak, snapping the 56-frame stretch by Walter Johnson. Drysdale's E.R.A. of 2.15 was sixth in the league and Don Sutton, at 2.60, was another Dodger among the top fifteen. Bill Singer, at 2.88, just missed a spot among the leaders. Two Dodger relievers had notable earned run averages, Hank Aguirre, at 0.69, and Jim Brewer at 2.49, and Brewer's 8-3 record was the best, percentagewise among the more active Dodger hurlers. The Dodger staff earned run average of 2.69 was second only to the N.L. champion St. Louis Cardinals. The Dodgers did not produce a no-hit game but Mike Kekich, since traded to the Yankees, hurled a one-hitter over the Mets. The Dodgers were third in the league in shutouts (23) and third in strikeouts (994).
